Midterm Write-up

During this process, I first designed my mockups to achieve a more clean, sophisticated style. However, after looking around on different donut shop websites, I realized that I wanted to match the fun theme of Kingpin. I eventually decided to go this route because the Kingpin is marketed towards college students at late nights, so I wanted it to be a more relaxed.

Additionally, I felt as giving it a more sketched look, and drawing some of the elements would add my own personal touch. For the spacing, I added a lot of elements, so I was unsure if I would have even spacing. But I tried to make the homepage feel filled without cluttering it.

Additionally, I chose my typography based on this “fun” theme. Color-wise, I wanted to keep neutral tones, so that the donuts on the home page would stand out more. For the menu dropdown, I struggled with coding because I want to have a hamburger overlay on the whole page. So, I had to watch a couple of videos and follow their code in order to get the full screen dropdown. However, one thing that I was unable to solve was how to stop the transitions from appearing after loading the page. After looking around a bit, I found people would use JavaScript, but I was unsure how to use it. Overall, I think this midterm allowed me to gain a better understanding of organization in design and how to utilize CSS more effectively.
